

SOVEREIGNTY OF THE STATE AND PROHIBITION OF INTERFERENCE IN ITS INTERNAL AFFAIRS

The author, with reference to the current crisis in Iraq, Libya, Syria, Somalia, Ukraine and the previous ones, finds that the foreign policy of stronger western states is not directed to the pursuit of peace, but it appears deliberately aimed to provoke a state of permanent armed conflict in which some States claim to take interventionist justifications that in reality can best further their business and geostrategic interests. This situation is likely to determine the intended destruction of state sovereignty and independence of peoples, that is the end of the international law and, on the structural side, of the international community of states itself that can not find their replacements in the law of the United Nations.
